The aim of the study was the assessment of the efficacy of the operative treatment of patients with primary and secondary hepatopathies, and the determination of the possible prognostic factors. Between 1995 and 2002 a total of 137 patients (16 children) of mean age 31.4 +/- 11.3 years, 69 men and 68 women, were included in the study. In 66 (48.2%) cases with complications of the portal hypertension, the treatment was combined with liver transplantation. Of the latter 42% were combined with living related donor transplantation. There were 13 patients with peritoneal carcinoma. The patients were divided into three groups: the first one included 48 patients with a median age 32.3 +/- 10.9 years (30.5 +/- 12.1 in men and 35.5 +/- 10.6 in women) in whom the surgical treatment was combined with transplantation. The second one included 40 patients with a median age of 31.9 +/- 11.1 years (31.5 +/- 12.5 in men and 30.4 +/- 9.7 in women) who were subjected to liver transplantation alone. The third group included the remaining 59 patients (mean age 31.0 +/- 11.7 years; 31.3 +/- 12.0 in men and 31.7 +/- 10.9 in women) with the portal hypertension of different genesis and were used as the control. Magnetic resonance imaging (MRI), computed tomography (CT) and ultrasound (US) were used for assessment. The median hospitalization time in the period of patient's stay was longer in the group with the transplantation by 27.3 days. There was no statistically significant difference between the median hospitalization time and the transplantation on the liver transplantation. The group with the peritoneal carcinoma had a statistically significantly longer hospitalization time. Two-thirds of the patients had good recovery. The grade of liver function according to Child-Pugh criteria did not affect the patients' recovery and only patients in Child C presented with prolonged liver insuff
