A portable English grammar workbook with 20 minutes per lesson,[Assessment of exposure to external carcinogenic factors among workers of the Tokuda Industries]. A cross-sectional epidemiological study was conducted to obtain information on exposure to various external carcinogenic factors among 5,089 male workers aged from 20 to 64 years in order to detect the relative risks (RR) of death due to lung cancer and lung-intestine cancer related to selected cancer-promoting activities, smoking habits, exposure to radiation, and a history of other types of cancer and/or acute myocardial infarction. The results obtained were as follows: 1) Among 1,234 workers (23.8%) involved in the chemical process-related industries, a significantly higher percentage of RR of death from lung cancer (26.1%) and lung-intestine cancer (23.1%) was observed among workers exposed to the highest levels of external carcinogenic factors; 2) The significantly highest levels of RR of death from lung cancer among those involved in the process-related industries were observed in workers exposed to radiation levels over 10 times the threshold limit value (TLV) of ionizing radiation (RR = 12.2%); 3) Of the 1,234 workers, a significant correlation was noted between the total frequency of past tumors at lower extremities and the percentage of smoking habits of the male workers involved in the process-related industries (P less than 0.001). The total frequency of past tumors at lower extremities of workers involved in the process-related industries was also significantly higher in workers with a history of acute myocardial infarction (P less than 0.001) and in workers exposed to higher levels of external carcinogenic factors (P less than 0.001). These results indicate
