This review describes recent advances in the molecular biology of RA. The signal pathway-activated cytokine cascade probably plays an important role in the pathogenesis of RA. Further, RA-associated polymorphisms of the HLA-DR region are associated with individual RA susceptibility. Several genes possibly associated with RA susceptibility, including IL-1, PTPN22, and TNFAIP3, have been reported, although the molecular biological basis remains unclear. RA associated genes can be classified according to different processes of disease pathogenesis such as the initial site of disease manifestation, pathogenetic targeting, and sequence of disease progression. The understanding of the pathogenesis of RA will help to further diagnostic and therapeutic strategies.

Ukraine's president-elect Oleksander Turchynov has been confirmed by the country's election commission, after pro-Russian supporters occupied parts of the capital Kiev. Mr Turchynov won an 80% vote share in the presidential run-off, reports say, after a bloody day of clashes in the city between protestors and security forces. He is expected to take the oath of office later on Wednesday. Dozens of people have been killed across the country in protests since last month. The Ukrainian government blames the violence on Russian-backed separatists in the east, and has vowed to take tougher action against them. Interim President Olexander Turchynov was sworn into office on Tuesday, after his rival Viktor Yanukovich was rushed to hospital. Earlier, Kiev said its security forces had withdrawn from the presidential administration building in Kiev, which they had cordoned off following clashes on Sunday.
