An Oklahoma judge granted an embattled 18-year-old man a temporary restraining order against an anti-gay group that has made national headlines for its protests. Judge Jerri Johnson of Tulsa County on Wednesday ordered that the Oklahoma Eagle Forum be prohibited from trying to visit the house of Devon Erickson or coming within 100 yards of him or his family, reports the Tulsa World. ADVERTISEMENT Erickson, who was born male but now identifies as female, had two topless women manning the front of their house shouting “Your son is a sissy boy!” after the teen came out as a transgender woman in March. The group’s spokesperson, Catherine Frazier, attempted to reason with the teenager, saying “No transgender people are homosexual. And no transgender people are transgendered just for the purposes of deceiving or damaging anyone's life or reputation." "I've never had any homosexual feelings, nor have I ever acted upon them," Erickson told Frazier. "I think they are a disgusting, vile, filthy thing." Members of the Oklahoma Eagle Forum have made headlines since last week by suggesting that the teenager would be better off if he were to marry his biological male girlfriend instead. Erickson's family say she is "regretting" her decision to come out as transgender, but think the demonstrations are "horrible." ADVERTISEMENT "We're scared for Devon. And I think she's getting hate mail. We understand that," said Erickson's father, Martin. "That's what she has to deal with." The family is representing themselves because the pair is too afraid of the demonstrations to hire legal counsel. "We have never had this

MR-guided brachytherapy of deep brain tumors: current state of the art. Magnetic resonance imaging

(MRI) offers a wealth of benefits for the treatment of deep brain tumors. The real-time capability of MRI, combined with the ability to plan and deliver radiation therapy in the operating room, allows for high-dose, conformal radiation therapy with rapid delivery. However, many anatomic limitations, including the presence of bone, air-filled cavities, and metallic hardware, can prevent accurate and safe MRI-based radiation therapy. Additionally, because of the nonlinear magnetic susceptibility properties of ionizing radiation, the delivery of high-dose radiation to small volumes within an MRI-based brachytherapy system may lead to dose inhomogeneities. The design and construction of medical hardware for MRI-guided brachytherapy has evolved over the past decade and has achieved an improved safety profile, compatibility, and accuracy. Clinical results using MRI-based brachytherapy for the treatment of deep brain tumors have also improved. As a result of these advances, the treatment of deep brain tumors with MRI-guided brachytherapy is now a feasible and safe clinical option. What is a structural system?
