The second wave of Marvel Select Galactus, Spider-Man and the Fantastic Four figures are set to be released soon, and it looks like the final assortment will be Marvel Select Cyclops! Cyclops is a short green cyborg who dons the helmet of the Marvel Select iteration of the character as seen in the current X-Men animated series! Cyclops sports a digital laser eye/eye beam, which comes in a translucent green color like his helmet. He comes with two "Cyclops" helmets that can be attached on the back of his helmet (removable). The sculpting on Cyclops is incredible, especially his head! This Marvel Select Cyclops figure will definitely be one that will make the shelves of our favorite toys stores, but what's your thought on Cyclops?I've long considered myself an expert on Islam. To that end, I've written several books on the religion, lectured on it, and been interviewed by major news outlets including the BBC and the Guardian, all with the tacit understanding that anyone who doesn't know what they're talking about doesn't deserve to be quoted. And yet, just the other day, I was asked if I would pray for a friend, who was one of only two Christians I have ever known. "Why would I pray for a non-believer?" I said. "Because they have a friend of the Muslim faith," they said. "No, that's not a Scenario: I am using Visual Studio 2013 with an active machine account. When I type'mypassword' in a textbox, the textbox becomes read-only and I am prompted to copy the password. When I type'mypassword' in the textbox, a few seconds later the same exact message appears and it does not allow me to paste mypassword. How do I prevent VS from doing this? I cannot assume that the user is intending to write his/her credentials on pasteboard. A: This is due to the anti-autofill feature that by default Visual Studio comes with when you install it.
