My motivation for this question is to learn what is possible, if anything, to test on an active circuit. A: Yes you can, but only to a limited extent. You can in principle test a circuit with a DMM by applying a known (simple) load to it and measuring the current. However the load required will be large. You can apply DC to a resistor and measure the voltage to confirm that the circuit is working. However even a 10 kOhm resistor will increase the load by a factor of 10^8 so the current might be too high for your measuring equipment. You can
